Terry also led National Geographic's successful domestic and international retail licensing, experiential entertainment, the National Geographic Live event businesses, as well as its Education Foundation. Being responsible for the growth and expansion of the National Geographic Museum and its traveling exhibitions' business, Terry developed some of the most successful exhibitions in the organization's history, including the seven-year global tour of Tutankhamun's treasures, which was visited by more than ten million people. In June 2010, he was appointed by President Obama to serve on the National Commission on the BP Deepwater Horizon Oil Spill and Offshore Drilling. He investigated the root causes of the oil spill in the Gulf of Mexico and made recommendations on how to prevent future incidents. In 2011, Terry received Peru's highest civilian award, La Orden del Sol del Perú, for his role in helping repatriate a collection of ancient artifacts taken from Machu Picchu in 1912. Prior to joining National Geographic, Terry was the Assistant Secretary of Commerce for Oceans and Atmosphere for the US Department of Commerce, and the Deputy Administrator of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA). He also served as NOAA's General Counsel from 1994 to 1996. Terry is currently the President of Exploration Ventures, a company providing strategic advice and counsel to global clients in a range of sectors. He is also co-founder of UPROAR, a conservation and media organization that develops and promotes market-based approaches to conservation.
